THE IRISH AND RUE MCMAHON

Drama, Integration, and Recognition

The façade of Saint-Patrick's Church on rue McMahon is a reminder of the Québec City Irish community's historic importance. The Celtic cross installed a bit further along evokes an especially tragic time in Irish history: the Great Famine of the 1840s, which led to a mass exodus and the arrival in Québec of hundreds of thousands of people. Many of the young immigrants were orphans and were adopted by French Canadians.

SAINT-PATRICK'S CHURCH

By around 1830 Québec City's Irish Catholics were numerous enough to establish their own place of worship. Their pastor, Reverend Patrick McMahon, got his wish in 1831. Architect Thomas Baillairgé oversaw the construction of the church, where Catholic services were conducted in English. It should come as no surprise that the building was dedicated to the patron saint of the Irish—Saint Patrick—and McMahon was the first parish priest.

The façade incorporated into a Hôtel-Dieu de Québec research centre survived two major fires that destroyed the rest of the building, which had lain abandoned since the 1960s.

QUÉBEC CITY'S IRISH COMMUNITY

Half of the immigrants who landed in Québec in the first two decades of the 19th century were of Irish origin. Most were Protestants who belonged to the wealthier classes of society. But there were still many Catholics, and their numbers increased greatly in the following decades, to the extent that their church was expanded twice, in 1853 and 1876. The second wave of immigration was, however, very different from the first.

Starting in 1830 agricultural day labourers left Ireland by the thousands in the hope of finding a better life abroad. These workers used all of their meagre savings to pay their way to Canada. Once in Québec City, they often settled in Lower Town, especially in the Champlain district, and many worked as longshoremen at the port. Their working conditions were so harsh that they formed one of Canada's first labour unions.

THE TRAGEDY OF 1847

The largest migration occurred in the 1840s. The Irish were fleeing a terrible famine that had devastated their country—potato blight, a parasite, destroyed the potato crops, the basis of their diet. At the height of the Great Famine, in 1847, nearly 100,000 Irish left for Canada. Unfortunately, many never made it.

The ship holds they traveled in were designed for transporting wood, and conditions were so unsanitary that a major typhus epidemic broke out. Many passengers died on the crossing and were thrown overboard without further ado. The survivors were dropped at Grosse Île, an island quarantine station facing Montmagny, where 5,000 of them died.

The Celtic cross erected on rue McMahon in 1997 was a gift to Québec City from the Irish. It is a reminder of the generosity of French-Canadian families who adopted children orphaned when their parents died on the trip, a gesture of solidarity that helped bring the two communities closer together.

A LITTLE-KNOWN HISTORY

The Irish community is smaller today than it once was—in the 1860s it made up one quarter of Québec City's population. But many Quebecers have Irish ancestry. And French-sounding names like Mainguy, Riel, and Sylvain often hint at an Irish relative, since they are related to the McGees, Reillys, and O'Sullivans.

Irish heritage is reflected in many ways. Irish music and dance, for example, like fiddle jigs and reels, are now closely associated with Québec traditions.

The annual Saint Patrick's Day parade in the streets of Québec City is becoming a tradition. Thousands participate enthusiastically regardless of their roots, clearly showing Québecers' strong attachment to the Irish community.

Quebec City

The Churches

During the first half of the 19th century, hundreds upon thousands of emigrants from the British Isles arrived in the port city of Québec. All were fleeing European poverty, famine, and overpopulation. Even though the majority would continue westward, quite a fair number chose to remain in the city. Confronted with a sudden growth in population, authorities would encourage the opening of new townships around Québec City. Most of these immigrants were Irish Catholics, and many would settle in Portneuf, Lotbinière, Dorchester, Lévis, Quebec counties, all areas located north and south of the city. In 1819, the Irish population of Québec City numbered nearly one thousand, by 1830 some estimates, place the Irish population at between six to seven thousand or nearly one quarter of the total population. By 1861, 40 percent of Québec City's 10,000 inhabitants were English-speaking, largely because of Irish families who made up 30 percent of the total population. As early as 1817, Irish Catholic Priests were shepherding the Irish population at Notre Dame Cathedral and most likely at the Diamond Harbour Parish, plus at the Church of the Nativity in nearby Beauport. The first annual Saint Patrick Mass was most likely celebrated in 1819 in the Congregationalist Chapel in Québec City.

The earliest church record I was able to trace regarding the Irish of the Québec City region was in 1736 in the parish of Saint Augustin in nearby Saint Augustin de Desmaures in Portneuf county – Notre Dame in Québec City claims to have records of Irish births, marriages, and burials as early as 1728, the latter date under the French regime. After the Battle of the Plains of Abraham in 1759, the English-speaking Catholics of Irish-Scottish-British origin were identified as such and described as a group by the ruling British Governors and their subordinates.

Saint Patrick's Day in 1765 - The Quebec Gazette account of Saint Patrick's Day events in 1765 which read in part: "...besides the divine service, entertainment and toasts will be held at the tavern, followed on the Monday night by a ball" – It appears that the festivities were held at Hugh Maguire's Shamrock Inn near the Haymarket – Which indicates that the Irish settlers in Québec City in 1765, had grown into a substantial number of families.

Old Quebec - Vieux Québec - Notre Dame Cathedral (1728 to 1818) – The church was first organized in 1621, about 1728, under the French regime, a few Irish, or British or Scottish settlers were known to worship in this House of God – From about 1760, under the British Regime, the Cathedral would be the home to many Irish / Scottish / British parishioners. Rev. Patrick McMahon, presiding from 1822 to 1828 - From about 1822 to 1828, Masses were celebrated in both

English and French. Prior to the establishment of St. Patrick in 1833, Notre-Dame (Cathedral), plus Notre-Dame de la Garde, Notre-Dame de Saint-Roch and Notre-Dame des Victoires were homes to the Irish community > BAnQ Numérique (1877-1918) > BAnQ Québec (1621-1941) > Les églises de mon quartier (church photo) > Cemeteries Leslabelle.com

Champlain Ward – Chapel of Our Lady of Perpetual Help - The Irish Chapel - Notre-Dame de la Garde – Chapel located from 1877 onward in a former school for Irish boys, this chapel was located near the Port of Québec on Champlain street – This church was the second home to many of the Irish dock workers, the region was also known as the Cove or Cap Blanc (White Cove) and also referred to by the Irish as Champlain Ward. Many of the Irish workers of that region would also work at the nearby Bell & Taylor Shipyards, in the construction of various ships. The many wharves along the St. Lawrence in Lower Town were the landing places of the immigrants between 1814 to the early 1920's. All marriages, baptisms and burials would have been carried-out at Saint Patrick or Notre Dame Cathedral from 1860 to 1884 > BAnQ Numérique (1885-1918 Notre-Dame-de-la-Garde) > BAnQ Québec (1885-1941 Notre-Dame de la Garde) > Les églises de mon quartier (church photo) > Cemeteries Leslabelle.com

Beauport

The region of Beauport is located east and north of Québec City and its northern limit is adjacent to the eastern limit of Portneuf County. These two regions located north of Québec City were settled by Scottish immigrants between 1780 and 1790 to be followed from about 1820 to 1830 by Irish farmers. Most of the farms allocated were small, less than 25 acres in a mountainous region, not suited for the raising of large crops. The latter does explain the exit of many of the Irish and Scots within three generations to better lifestyles in southern Québec, Ontario, the western provinces, and the United States of America

Ste-Brigitte de Laval - Sainte Brigitte de Laval – Parish organized in 1834 and located slightly north of Lake Beauport. The first settlers to the parish appear to have been Irish immigrant families. Fossambault - Pont Rouge – Saint Patrick, a mission field of the parish of Sainte-Catherine de la Jacques Cartier or of Sainte-Jeanne-de-Neuville – Between 1821 and 1828, the Seigniorship of Fossambault would grant acreage suitable for farming to Andrew Wilson, George Thompson, John McCord, James Morrow on the Brulé Range. These four families were the first British Isles settlers west of St. Catherine of Portneuf. Other sources indicates that these early British Isles pioneers might have originated from Scotland, or Ulster. Stoneham - Saint-Edmond of Stoneham - As early as 1817, Irish settlers, American families from Connecticut plus Scottish and British homesteaders were settling the area. The town of Stoneham was recommended in the early 1830s by the British authorities as a destination of choice for Irish emigrants who wanted to settle on their own small farms. Although the region was far from being a perfect match for productive farming, this region being surrounded by mountains did receive a fair number of immigrant families - The parish registers of St. Edmond of Stoneham only began in 1851, from about 1817 to 1832, in regard to acts of baptism, marriage, death verify Notre-Dame Cathedral in Quebec City and from 1832 to 1851, verify Sainte-Catherine de la Jacques-Cartier > BAnQ Numérique (1877-1918 Saint-Edmond) > BAnQ Québec (1851-1941) > Les églises de mon

Portneuf

Many North American Irish descendants will tell you that their Irish ancestors first established their residence in the Portneuf region of Québec City. The region attracted Irish and Scottish farmers as early as 1816. The quality of the land is fertile and ideal for small farm owners. Portneuf County is located along the northern shores of the St. Lawrence River, slightly upstream and west of Québec City – The leading Irish communities of Portneuf County and nearby Québec County were St. Catherine of Jacques Cartier (1832), Wexford Road of St. Gabriel of Valcartier (1820), Saint Gabriel of Valcartier (1820), Stoneham (1824), Shannon (1830), St. Dunstan (1830), Pont Rouge (1834) with surrounding communities such as Portneuf, St. Raymond, St. Basile, St. Christine and others. Most were farming communities with 50-acre farms. The region in the 1830's was a primary destination for Irish farmers with a North American destination who were willing to settle on a small acreage.

Saint Augustin – Saint Augustin – First organized in 1694 and located along the banks of the St. Lawrence, just west of Cap Rouge, Sainte Foy and Sillery, the region in the 1800's was most likely the best fertile land for farming in the Québec City region. To this day, large farms are still operational. The first Irish settlers in the region were worshipping at this church from about 1845 > BAnQ Numérique (1874-1918 St-Augustin-de-Desmaures) > BAnQ Québec (1694-1941 St-Augustin-de-Desmaures) > Les églises de mon quartier (church photo) > Cemeteries Leslabelle.com (2 dossiers) > Family Search.org (1875-1900) & (1694-1876)

Tewksbury – Saint James (Saint-Jacques) - The region was first served by a mission as early as 1865, most likely as a mission of Stoneham or Saint Gabriel of Jacques Cartier, only in 1921 did the church of Saint James opened its doors with a new church building. The church still exists to this day, it is only opened during the summer months – Tewksbury was decreed by the management of the Port of Québec in 1832 as being a recommended destination for would-be Irish homesteaders. Please note that the town of Tewksbury is part of the county of Québec, but the town has always been associated with Portneuf county, at least by some – BAnQ Numérique (1877-1918 Saint-Gabriel-de-Valcartier) > BAnQ Québec (1921-1941 Saint-Jacques) > Les églises de mon quartier (church photo) > Cemeteries Leslabelle.com)
